20. Put in the correct order three main components and one additional of persuasive speech structure:
21. Below is a speech sample: 1. Introduction A. Today I am going to walk through with you the steps on how to create a sock bun. This new up-do style was made popular in the Hollywood scene and although we are not celebrities, ladies, you too can create this style in a few simple steps. B. Sometimes a regular bun can become messy, especially if you've been outside all day and the wind is blowing; however, with a sock bun, it will be secure all day and you won't have to worry about it. Throughout my presentation, I will walk you through the steps on how to tease, roll, and pin in your sock bun using the "donut," a few pins, and some hairspray. 2. Body A. Gather all materials 1. Hair tie and "Donut" 2. Hairspray and bobby pins 3. Comb and mirror B. Hair in a ponytail 1. Security and high or low 2. Create pony tail with hairspray and comb C. Apply "donut" to ponytail 1. Helps create bun look 2. Place "donut" on top of ponytail D. Teasing hair 1. Full coverage of "donut" 2. Hold straight and tease downward E. Rolling hair with "donut" 1. Pull "donut" to end of ponytail 2. Fold hair over and roll down F. Style and pin 1. Use mirrors and apply hairspray 2. Add bobby pins and go 3. Conclusion A. Now you have created a "Hollywood style" sock bun using the simple steps in styling a ponytail, rolling the "donut" through your hair, and pinning and spraying for security. B. This is a hair style that you can dress up or down, which I really like. So by following these easy steps, you can create a sock bun that best fits your personal style and preference. Thank you. Identify which type of speech it is.

(and therefore know something about!). I hope you enjoy it and can use it as an example for writing your own informative speech. Today, I'd like to give you some of the facts about caffeine and its effects on your body. I may not cause you to change your coffee consumption, but at least you'll be better informed about what you are putting into your body. I'm going to talk about the beneficial effects of caffeine, the negative effects and discuss what are considered to be 'safe' levels of caffeine consumption. Let's start with the good news. Caffeine, which comes from the leaves, seeds and fruits of about 63 different plants, is well known as a stimulant. That's why people drink it, right? Caffeine does help you wake up and feel more alert and it has been shown to increase attention spans. This is a beneficial effect for people who are driving long distances and for people who are doing tedious work. Calling this a health benefit may be stretching it, though staying awake while you are driving a car definitely contributes to your well-being! Caffeine also contains antioxidants, which have been shown to have cancer prevention qualities. The negative effects of caffeine are largely dependent on how much you consume. When consumed in small quantities – for example, when you have one cup of coffee or one soda – caffeine can increase your heart rate, cause you to urinate more (which can cause dehydration) and prompt your digestive system to produce more acid. In larger amounts, caffeine can cause you to have headaches, feel restless and nervous, be unable to sleep, and even – in very large quantities – to have hallucinations. (Don't try that at home!) When larger amounts of caffeine (over 600 mg per day) are ingested over long periods of time, they can cause sleep problems, depression and digestion issues. According to a Medline article on the National Institutes of Health website, having caffeine in your diet is not of any benefit to your health, but by the same token moderate consumption is not considered harmful. They say that having up to three eight-ounce cups of coffee a day – or 250 mg of caffeine – is considered (quote) "average or moderate". Ten cups of coffee a day is considered excessive. Also, remember that the amount of caffeine per cup can vary greatly depending on the type of beans that are used and the strength of the brew. Most sodas with caffeine, unless they are specially enhanced, have about 35 mg of caffeine per eight ounces. This means that you don't have to worry TOO much unless you are drinking several two-liter bottles per day. Also, the effect of caffeine on you personally will depend on a number of factors, such as your weight, general health, mood and personal sensitivity to caffeine. As you can see, caffeine can have both positive and negative effects on our health and well-being. Nevertheless, the bottom line is that if you drink your coffee or sodas in moderation, you don’t have to worry too much. So, the next time you are wondering whether or not you should have that second cup of coffee to perk you up, relax. At least now you know what it will – and won’t – do for you!”. Identify the type of speech in the text.

126. Anthony Campanelli, a partner with Deloitte Financial Advisory Services LLP’s forensics and investigations team, has had to deliver negative news to clients on multiple occasions. It’s evident they won’t be happy to hear it and will be ready to express their negative thoughts and comments. Identify the type of audience.

127. John Richardson is trying to convince first-year college students to avoid credit card solicitors on campus. The students are not passionate about the topic or speaker, because they do not have enough information and they are not aware that they should be concerned. Identify the type of audience.

128. Below is a description of the effective public speaking skill: “Fear of public speaking is normal but berating yourself for fostering such a far is abnormal. It would be far more productive to generate positive thoughts and direct your fearful energy into that of determined practice to ensure success in your public speaking stint. Avoid phrases such as “I will never master it!” “I’m no good at this” as they all represent fear of failure which is trying to repress you within your comfort zone”. Which skill of effective public speaking is referred to in the description?

129. Below is a description of the effective public speaking skill: “Your listeners are the determinants of how well you spoke rather than how well you think you spoke. The words your use, the choice of language, the punch lines, the sense of humor and more should all be considerate of the people sitting in the audience. The audience will be much more attentive and responsive when they hear the message being spoken in a language they are familiar with without the use of any jargons”. Which skill of effective public speaking is referred to in the description?
